

Back in 1971, it was reported that the average man in the United States had a literacy rate of 80%. By the 1970s, however, the literacy rate had dropped to 60%. This was due to a number of factors, including a decline in the quality of education and a lack of motivation to learn. The literacy rate has since risen to 85%, but the quality of education has not improved. This is a concern for many educators and parents.
